A FOWL PROCEEDING.

The friends of Dr. Hallum are somewhat worried over his general appearance and preoccupied manner these days.

He does act somewhat strange and has a faraway look in his eyes, searching in out of the way places as though on the hunt for something and ever and anon, he is seen quietly stealing out of the back door of his store, cross lots, and toward home, shorter restless and nervous like. He will never get over it; although it is not dangerous. We pity him for we know how he feels. No Doc. has not got a brain storm! It is just a plain old fashioned case of "chicken fever" and he has got it bad. White Leghorns are his favorites and he has just received some choice specimens from Pennsylvania. He has an incubator and brooder on the road, and he will never be supremely happy till they arrive and the little chicks are peeping.

Bear with him good people, he can't help it.

"HE WHO LAUGHS LAST LAUGHS LOUDEST"

It is not long since Charlie Cureton's friends laughed and pronounced him a crank on account of his love for thoroughbred fowls. But it is Mr. Cureton's turn to laugh, as many in this vicinity have joined the ranks of the fanciers and engaging in this fascinating occupation. Breeding fancy poultry is a pleasant pastime for business people, and not only pleasant but profitable.

It is a business especially adapted for the ladies, and many of them are among the most enthusiastic and successful exhibitors at the large poultry shows. We hope that all those interested in the fancy, will become interested to the extent of holding a poultry show in Pickens next winter which would go far towards arousing an interest in this line among the farmers.

Among those who are interested in feathered pets and have sent abroad for high class stock, are Mrs. J. N. Hallum, Mrs. C. G. Voight, Mrs. M. F. Hester, Mr. Chas. Cureton, Rev. D. D. Jones, Willie Thompson and many others.

Attempted Assault.

There was considerable excitement Friday caused by the report of an attempted assault by a negro on the twelve-year-old daughter of Mr. Barry C. Holcombe, near Etley. As it was believed the negro was making toward Pickens, officers started to head him off but returned at night after finding no trace of him. The negro, Ernest Langston, was arrested at Easley Saturday morning and after being identified by the little girl, was put through a terrible sweating and finally confessed and was hurried to Pickens jail. The little girl who seems to be a remarkably bright child, tells a very straight story and there seems to be no doubt of the guilt of the negro, although he tells a plausible story since being locked up, in direct contradiction to his reported confession.

It seems that the little girl was on her way home from school in company with her little brother and when near a bridge the negro seized her, holding a pistol in her face. The girl knocked the gun aside and in the scuffle her clothing was torn; the little boy screaming for help, the negro made off. It was reported that the father was determined to take the case in his own hand but yielded to pleadings of the little girl who begged him not to shoot him but allow him to be hung. The general opinion of all who heard the little girl's story is that she gave a straightforward report of an attempted assault.

The negro, since being locked up, tells the story that he was shooting at a snake when the children came along and the little boy threw a rock at him which brushed his overalls on as he stooped to pick up another one the negro took the girl by the shoulder and held her between him and the boy to keep him from hitting him. When she screamed he told her that he was not going to hurt her. He went home and did not know that he was suspected of being guilty of a crime until arrested. But he has contradicted his own statements several times. There was some talk of lynching but everything is quiet.
